From the Cincinnati Commercial, 30th ult. Extraordinary Spectacle-Midnight Parade of the Scus of Malta.

An extraordinary spectacle was witnesed by mingled emotious of emiosity, mirthfulness, and wonder. The Sons of Malta, a secret benevolent organization, in existence here but a few months, paraded, for the first time, with with bands of music, filling the atmosphere with inclancholy strains of funeral harmonies. Our descriptive faculties shriuk in confusion before the task of picturing it felicitously in ink and type. It was so strange, so weird, so queer, so threatening, but, toward ten o'clock, the mass-impressive, exciting the enriosity of all into so of clouds swing apart, like drapery of a wonder; awing children and women, like the theater, and Phoebus began his visible perormances in the elegant pavilion appropriated unpoetic men; its solemn gravity inspiring to his purposes. Fiery steeds he drove, in his emotions as diverse as the elements of human nagnificent hippodrome, one would judge, from nature in the thousands who gezed upon it, unthe warmth that distilled from his car, the comprehending, and unsympathizing; in short, it was utterly dissimilar in aspect to any and " ()lympic dust" would have been rather of all polyoramic spectacles conceived, invented, the warm ashes quality, had it not been for ac-

The solemnity of midnight; the awe of darknected with them, all conspired to constitute the parade equally interesting and extraordinary. It seemed to some as if the demons of the ancient Inquisition had revisited cartlely scenes to fright the soul into pious confessions of unacted guilt. To facetious minds, it preseuted features provocative of boisterons mirth-

The procession numbered some five hundred men. It organized in the lodge room in the Mechanics' fustitute, and described the following line of march: Up Vine to Eighth; down thence to Elm; west to Seventh; down to Western Row; south to Fourth; east to Broad way; south to the wharf, where it counter marched, and returning to Third, it proceeded west to Vine, and thence direct to the lodge Three musketeers shreast, with black cowls
